A newly redeveloped Hackney Wick station opened in May 2018. Designed by Landolt + Brown Architects with artist Wendy Hardie, the station has a new subway, lifts and overall improved layout.

The principal funder for the £25 million project was the London Legacy Development Corporation. Hackney and Tower Hamlets Councils each provided £1 million.

The designers sought to create something uniquely relevant to the area. They drew references from Hackney Wick’s historical industries, particularly its innovative industrial chemistry, and the experience of walking and cycling the neighbouring Hackney Cut canal and Lee Navigation.

A new subway running north to south beneath the existing railway line has replaced the pre-existing footbridge and will eventually open up new pedestrian and cycle links between Wallis Road and White Post Lane. The subway features coloured concrete walls imprinted with chemical symbols to signify the area’s industrial heritage and an illuminated glass wall to reflect the local waterways.

A new ticket hall has also been built with new stairwells and lifts providing access to the station platforms. The stairwell architecture was inspired by the weeping willows that are found along the Lee Navigation.

‘Step into history. Step into the old Smokehouse’ (says the estate agents blurb). The building being described is not actually a former smokehouse, or even old – the name, we are told, ‘tips its hat to Forman’s’, a long-established Fish Island presence for all of six years. Time in the Wick, after decades of stasis, is suddenly moving very fast. More historically pedantic buyers purchase a flat in the Old Bagel Factory, which until recently was a bagel factory, though I don’t recall it then having a swimming pool on the roof. What was once for centuries the beating heart of industrial East London [the blurb continues] is now an artistic hub where old blends with the new and a generation of curators have turned this canal side village into the most exciting place to be in the city. This is where it happens. Where beer is served straight from the tank, where coffee shops are workplaces and where restaurants are housed in barges nestled on the water. Old Smokehouse is the place to enliven your living.

One of many places in the Wick to enliven your living, actually, whatever that means. Most of the former business property in the old industrial Wick and Fish Island now has consent for redevelopment, generally as housing with a hint of business and studio complexes – Oslo and Lion Works, the Peanut Factory, on Fish Island – seem to be surviving, lending both their artistic and architectural idiosyncrasies to the emerging mix, though tragically, Vittoria Wharf has been part demolished by, of all people, the London Legacy Development Corporation. Essential bars – Stour Space, White Post Cafe – seem secure at least for the time being. The totemic shell of the Lord Napier is only threatened by its renovation and reopening, which is in train. The trigger for all this is, of course, the Olympics. While no Olympic investment found its way to the Wick (or indeed any of the other so-called fringe areas), its repositioning of the Wick post-2012 to the front row of the brave new legacy world has had an unstoppable effect. Meanwhile, major new investment and change is also underway on the Park side of the Cut, as the giant Here East digital business centre continues improbably to grow, and the Legacy Corporation commence development of its new ‘neighbourhoods’ – Sweetwater, and East Wick – which are intended to become integrated over time with the existing Wick and Fish Island settlement.

Will all this work? The housing market is a fickle thing, and is already starting to stutter. So much housing supply over such a relatively short timescale carries uncomfortable risks for developers, and several landowners of some of the most interesting sites in the Wick are cautiously holding back on development schemes. Can its limited infrastructure really cope with the arrival of such an expanded population? New schools have already been built, and new retail and more is planned for the Hackney Hub but this is still some way off. Where will people work? How much business will really be attracted to the wealth of funky new space which is being created? London Overground through Hackney Wick Station is already heaving. Can it take more? In practice flux will continue, and is perhaps a good thing, while these issues are worked through. Probably for some time to come it will remain this weird hybrid of industry and housing; new and old, public and private, which is oddly reflective of the Wick over time. Somehow one senses that the Wick will remain unusual, attractive and interesting, and will always be different, but the idiosyncrasy and surprise we know and love today will become a thing of the past.
Picture from a Portrait: Demonstrators calling for an Independent Inquiry into the Death of Colin Roach

By Laurie Elks

Our 50th anniversary publication, Hackney: Portrait of a Community 1967-2017, was published in October 2017. This is one of the photos from the book.

Few events cast a greater shadow over Hackney in 1984 than the death of Colin Roach. The 21-year-old died the previous year in very puzzling circumstances in the foyer of Stoke Newington police station. An inquest later concluded that he had committed suicide, but the angry local reaction that his death provoked was a symptom of the deep distrust between the local police and the black community.

Duncan Campbell covered the demonstrations and the conflict that followed from this distrust over many years for Time Out and City Limits and later for The Guardian. His chapter in the book (1984: The Inquiry into the Death of Colin Roach) and David Hoffman’s vivid image bring those troubled times back to life.

RIBA London Awards

A number of new buildings in Hackney are among the winners of the 2018 Royal Institute of British Architects London Awards. They include: Kings Crescent Estate Phases 1 and 2 by Henley Halebrown and Karakusevic Carson Architects; De Beauvoir Block by Henley Halebrown for the Benyon Estate; hyde Park Primary School by Hawkins Brown, Karakusevic Carson Architects and Henley Halebrown; The Makers House by Liddicoat & Goldhill (see Spaces 56); and Vex by Chance de Silva & Scanner (see Spaces 59). Another winner was the restoration of Hackney Town Hall by Hawkins/Brown. The Kings Crescent Estate also won the Mayor of London’s Prize at the New London Awards on 4 July.

Clowns Gallery

A collection of eggs painted with clown faces has been moved to the Clowns Gallery and Museum in Holy Trinity Church in Dalston. Formerly the eggs were housed at Wookey Hole in Somerset. The museum is open on the first Friday of the month from noon until 5pm.

Tower Theatre

The Tower Theatre Company has acquired Sunstone House on Northwold Road as its new home. Dating from the late 19th century, the building was originally a Methodist church. The chapel, which was badly war damaged and derelict, was extensively repaired and renovated by the Jewish congregation Beth Hamedrash Ohel Yisroel in 1953, and on 18 December 1955 it was consecrated as the Northwold Road Synagogue. The synagogue closed in 1989. In 1992 Sunstone Health and Leisure Club refitted the building as a women-only gym, which closed in 2014. The first production in the building, which is to be renamed Tower Theatre, will be in Autumn 2018.

Mary Wollstonecraft

The Mary on the Green Campaign, which has been pressing for a memorial to Mary Wollstonecraft, has selected Maggi Hambling to create a statue on Newington Green. In 2020, an exhibition will be held of art inspired by the life and work of the great feminist.

Church Crescent

Historic England has designated four 1980s properties in Homerton as Grade II listed. Designed by Colquhoun and Miller, the houses – at 23, 23a, 24 and 25 Church Crescent – are among 17 new postmodern listings.

Shoreditch Audio Walk

Home-City Stories is an app-based audio walk that starts at the Geffrye Museum and weaves its way on and around Kingsland Road before finishing at Hackney Archives. The walk draws on research at Queen Mary University of London, in collaboration with the Geffrye Museum of the Home, Hackney Archives and current and former residents.

Swifts

Hackney Council has announced a set of proposals designed to help halt and reverse the decline of swifts in the borough due to habitat loss. The birds are now officially classified as endangered in the UK. Swifts are unique among birds in that they rely almost 100% on the built environment for nesting space. As older buildings are renovated and newer buildings are totally sealed, available nesting sites for swifts to raise their young have fallen dramatically. The Council will now take action in three key areas – through the planning process; through ensuring that permanent swift nests are built into all suitable new council housing developments; and through identifying and creating a register of existing council-owned buildings where ‘swift boxes’ could be fitted retrospectively.

Former Swan

The Bobof community has been given permission to demolish the building at 73 Clapton Common and to build a three-storey synagogue. The existing building was formerly a pub, The Swan.
